

This is why the new service is important. Some 2.5 per cent of the population can't use regular bus services. In Canada Coach Lines Country, that's 25,000 people.

Right now, the new service is a demonstration project organized and assisted by Transport Canada. In the future, we hope it's something that's offered across the country.

No more than three calls does it all.

1. Making a reservation.

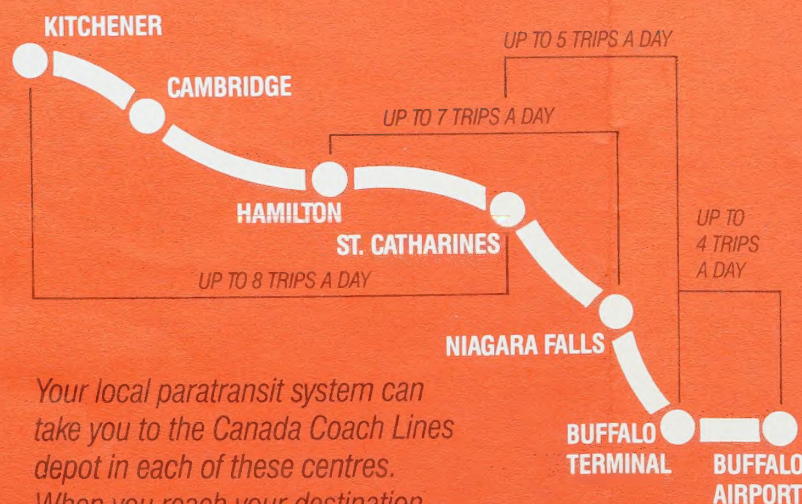

Dial Canada Coach's Help number – toll-free – 1-800-263-8582. In Hamilton call 679-3144. Phone early – we're limited to two wheelchair positions per coach. Our operator will tell you our schedule to your destination – and make your reservation. (This is a good time to arrange your return trip too.) The operator can also give you the phone number of the paratransit service at your destination.

2. Getting to the terminal.

Now you know when you're going. You have two choices. You can arrive at the Canada Coach Lines terminal on your own . . . or call your local paratransit people. Tell them you're riding with us – and when. They'll make arrangements for their bus to get you to our coach on time.

3. Need a ride to your destination?

If you need a ride when you get there, call the paratransit people at your destination. Tell them when you're travelling – and where you want to go when you get there. They'll make sure you're met.

Your local paratransit system can take you to the Canada Coach Lines depot in each of these centres. When you reach your destination – the local paratransit system can take you where you want to go.

A couple of minutes after the Canada Coach Lines bus has stopped . . . you've been elevated up safe inside: the regular seats slide out of the way and your wheelchair is safely locked in.

The new equipment is now being used on this Canada Coach Lines route.
